Hans Holbein the Younger was a German painter. He used oil paint, chalk and ink to create realistic portraits and is considered one of the best portrait artists of the time. In his career, he was employed by the court of King Henry VIII as a painter and he also designed state robes for the king. Holbein the Younger often added plants, animals and decorative details to his portraits. He also designed woodcuts for book illustrations. Holbein the Younger was born in either 1497 or 1498 and died of the plague in 1543.
